DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-3 and 12-20 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Janik et al., (US 2002/0078248).

As per claim 1, 12, 13, 14, and 20, Janik teaches a handheld information handling apparatus having a connector interface for swappable connection to appendant devices of two kinds, said appendant device of the first kind (LAN adapter) when connected thereto communicating with said information handling apparatus using a first transmission standard, and said appendant device (docking cradle) of the second kind when connected thereto communicating with said information handling apparatus using a second transmission standard, a method of signal transmission between said information handling apparatus and said appendant devices, comprising the steps of:

representing a first set of signals generated according to said first transmission standard by a reduced set of signals (wireless communication protocol, [0036]), wherein said reduced set of signals is transmitted over said connector interface while said information handling apparatus is communicating with said appendant device of the first kind; transmitting a second set of signals according to said second transmission standard (standard serial protocol, [0039]) over said connector interface while said information handling apparatus is communicating with said appendant device of the second kind.

Janik teaches a PDA that allows for wireless communication via a LAN adapter and communication with a keyboard or PC via a docking cradle. The LAN adapter has a reduced number of pins for communicating with the PDA than the number of pins that connects to the PDA to the docking cradle. The cradle connection will for interaction with a PC while the LAN adapter allows the PDA to communication with other devices over a network. The LAN adapter uses a wireless communication protocol [0037] when exchanging information with an external network and the PDA. When the PDA is in the docking cradle a standard serial protocol [0040] is used for exchanging information with the PDA and the PC even if the LAN adapter is connected to the PDA. Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill at the time the invention was made that Janik teaches the use of a first appendant (LAN adapter) and a second appendant (docking cradle) when each appendant communicate with the PDA using two different communication protocols.

As per claims 2, 3, and 18, Janik teaches distinguishing between the first and second set of signals to determine which set of signal will be sent over the connector interface.

Art Unit: 2182

As per claims 15-17, the PCMCIA, COMPACT FLASH, AND RS-232 are well known communication protocols, thereby making use of these well known communication standards obvious.

As per claim 19, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill at the time the invention was made Janik teaches distinguishing whether one of said first appendant device and said second appendant device is connected to said handheld device.

Allowable Subject Matter

Claim 4 is objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.

Claims 5-11 allowed over the prior art.
